

Paris 2011 Journal

Tuesday, March 15 - Saw Louise.

As we left the apartment to catch a metro, I took a photo of one of the many wholesale stores. This one sells necklaces. Those are scores and scores of white necklaces hanging in display.

On the way to Louise' apartment we passed these trees in bloom near the Gare. Spring is definitely on its way.

We visited with Louise for about an hour then walked through the Gare to One Piece en Plus, the self-storage where we have rented a one-meter cube of storage space. We retrieved a few items. Olivia photocopied her music and EM got some photos, both at Monoprix.

As we left Monoprix we walked onto rue Delambre, where we shopped when we lived at Grand Chaumière.

We went to the Battery Store where the clerk fixed my tuner by placing the battery in correctly. That's all that was wrong with it.

As we left the store I noticed the jewelry store next door where I had seen a chunky red necklace on our last trip. We went in and I found another, smaller necklace that will compliment several new blouses Leslie picked out for me before I came on this trip.

We had an apéro at “La Station Rambuteau, 20 rue Beaubourg” a pichet (50 cl) of Beaujolais villages and a planche (a plate of combined charcuterie and cheese.)

Walking back to rue de Temple on Rambuteau we stopped at one of the three produce stores for a few items.

Had another "snack" upon returning to our apartment.